

Growing up in Upper Dublin School District in Pennsylvania, Matt Dunnam was drawn to the creative arts from a young age. Originally pursuing and attaining a degree in music industry and technology from Drexel University, he decided to further his career through acting gigs, writing, and other related pursuits.

While working in a series of sales jobs, Matt's acting gigs led to a necessary understanding of basic public relations-related activities. His practice of these activities directly led to an interest in public relations. This interest gradually grew until Covid hit the United States and he was left out of work from his sales job as a home theater system designer. At this point he decided to attain a Master's degree in Public Relations from his alma mater, Drexel University, where he currently takes Communication classes online. Matt currently plans to work in film and talent public relations in Hollywood after graduation with the long-term goal of owning a major entertainment enterprise.

Matt's daily practices continue to grow as he studies Psychology, Religion, and Entrepreneurship as well as continuing to seriously pursue acting, music, writing, drawing, dancing and martial arts, and meditation. Matt looks forward to adding comedy into his daily studies as he continues his restless pursuit to create and to serve those in need.
